

The Research Process

Recover from the shock of the assignment

Eagerly embrace the task, confident of the process

Search for ideas and information from various reliable sources, taking careful notes

Establish a thesis and evaluate whether it is significant, important, relevant, or valuable

Arrange information and ideas effectively to support the thesis statement in a well-written properly documented essay

Revise the paper, refining or expanding details and correcting errors of fact or judgement

Check spelling, punctuation, grammar, documentation, and sentence forms

Hand in the completed research paper on time and have a celebration

Adapted by Bill Stifler from material written by Mary Cable, Chattanooga State student, ENGL1010-11, 2001F. Used with permission.